HIS LETTER.

One rainy night, about half past eight o'clock the train dashed into M'Kibbin's Corners, and the mail had been delivered at the store and

John Fairjohn, the postmaster had opened the bag and counted the letters. There were, as he made it out, just ten and one was larger than the others, and had a red seal; and then he had found he had left his glasses on the newspaper in the back room and without his glasses he could not read a line; and so, of course, he had gone after them, returning to find two persons in the store—Farmer Roper, and Squire M'Kibben, whose ancestors had given name to Wet ain't it! said Mr. Fairjohn Wet or not, our folks ain't going to do without their groceries, you see, said the Squire. 'Mail's in, I see. That train came near running into my truck too. Wasn't noticing the flag, and drove across just in time to save myself. Any etters for me?

I'll see, said Fairjohn. He turned to the little pile of envelopes, and told them over in his hand like a deck of cards.

Why, there's only nine, he I'm sure I counted right. I counted ten and I thought one had a red seal. I might as well give up keeping the office if I'm going to lose my senses like that. There wasen't any one in here while I was gone, was there, Squire? Only Roper and I, said the squire and Roper's son. But be didn't come in, did he? said old Roper. 'I don't think that Job came in at all. He, just went off somewhere.

Well, said the postmaster, after another search, well I must be mistaken. Yes, there is a letter for you-your folks anyway-and something for you Mr. Roper. And you wouldn't mind tossing that in at Smith's as you pass?

Oh, no, said farmer Roper, 'Give it to me. That's from Smith that's clerking it in New York, I reckon. Can't get any of 'em to stay and

Your son Job did, said the Squire. Oh, my son Job. He'd try the patience of his namesake, said farmer Roper. My son Job, bah. Just at the moment the door of the store opened, and there entered calico and wrapped in a thin faded

She looked timidly about the store, still more timidly at the heap of letters, and then, in an appealing voice like that of a frightened child,

Mr. Farjohn, is there any letters for me this time? The postmaster, who was a little deaf, had turned his head away and did not know that she had entered and she came closer, to the counter and the light upon it before she spoke again. She was a faded woman, and her face had a sign of grie! written upon it, but she was meither old or ugly yet, and there was something in the damp curls clustering under the faded hood and me so.

in the little round, dimpled chin absolutely childlike even yet. Is there a letter for me this time, Mr. Fairjohn? she asked again; and this time the postmaster looked up. No, there ain't, and you're a fool for taking such a walk to ask; said he with rough kindness, Wouldn't I have sent it if it had a-come, Mra.

Well, you see I felt in a hurry to get it, said she. You can't blame me for being in a hurry, its so long. That's true, said the postmaster.
Well better luck next time. But why don't you wait? Mr. M'Kibben will take you over when he goes. Yes, wait, Mrs. Lester, cried Mr. M'Kibben; I'll take ye and wel-

But she had answered: Thank you. I don't mind walking, and was gone. Keeps it up, don't she? asked the It's a shame said Mr. M'Kibben.

How many years is it since Lester Ten, said the postmaster. I know for it was the day I came here. She was as pretty a woman as you'd want to see, then, wasn't she? Well, yes, said Mr. M'Kibben. Sailed in the Sphynx, said the postmaster. And we all know that the Sphynx went down in that voyage, and all hands along with her. The rest of the women put on wid-ow's weeds, them that lost husbands-four in this town itself. They took what the Almighty sent, and didn't rebel. She set up that her husband wasen't dead, and would come back. She has kept it up ever since; comes for his letter regular; and he was drowned long with all She must be thirty. Well, she's changed a good deal in that time.

Yes, said the other man; but there's my son Job wild over her yet. He's offered himself twice. He stands ready to offer himself again any day—ready to be a father to her boy, and a good husband to her. He's better off than I be. His mother's father lefthim all he had. He's crazy as Job—crazy I call it. Plenty of pretty gals, and healthy smart widows, and he sees no one but that pale, slim, little thing, that's just gone out into the mud; and she-why, of course she's ost her senses or she'd have him. Works like a slave to keep herself and the child, lives in a rickety shanty, waiting and waiting for a drowned man to come back again. Why, every one knows that Charlie Lester was drowned in the Sphynx. There wasen't a soul saved, not one.

They laugh at me, she muttered to herself. I know they laugh at me. Perhaps I am mad; but they don't know what love is. Charlie wouldn't have left me like that. If he had died he would have given me some sign; and, yet—if he were alive, it would be stranger still. No, no, they are right. I am wrong. He must be dead.

ABOARD THE SILVER STAR .- Jesdeath, worn out, still on, that fruit-less errand. Jessie Lester, can't you give up this nonsense and think of the living a little. Think of me, something does,

Five of us were cast on a desert sland when the Sphynx went down. The two yet alive, were taken off it yesterday in skins, with our beards to our knees. We must go to Engand first—then home, Jessie, Jessie if I do not find you as I left you shall go mad. Your husband, CHARLES LESTER.

And so Jesse's letter had come at last. And so John Fairjohn looked into her face and saw how angels looked in paradise.

And Job. Job was found drowned

Battle Creek, 45 miles west of Jackson, on the Kalamazoo River, at the mouth of Battle Creek, has one of the finest water-powers in the State, and manufactures largely. Its opulation is 7,000. But outside of Detroit, the "boss" town of Michigan is Grand Rapids, situated at the head of navigation, on both sides of Grand River, forty miles from its mouth; a line of small steamers run to Grand Haven. This town has the best water-power in the State, and it. is fully utilized. There are nearly a thousand men employed in their fur-niture establishments alone. In 1870, the population was 16,507-to-day it is 30,000-a most wonderful increase. Her hotels, churches and school buildings and business houses vie with anything in the State. As the main business street lies very low, they are raising whole rows of buildings 44 feet-as they did in Chicago, and grading up so as to get out of the reach of high water.

From Grand Rapids I went to Muskegon, 48 miles N. W., situated on Muskegon Lake, five miles from Lake Michigan. It contains a population of 9,000. It has a daily line of steamers to Chicago; is one of the argest lumber manufacturing towns in the State and has about 30 saw mills, some of them with a capacity of 200,000 ft. per day. It is well worth one's time to step in and see one of these monster mills when in full blast. It is surprising to see how quickly a log is put into inch boards. But at Benona, opposite Bay City, is the largest mill in the State—H. W. Sage & Co.—which, on trial, cut 387,000 ft. in 12 hours. Muskegen has not yet recovered from the terrible fire of '71. Whole vacant squares mark where the fire-fiend held full sway. From this point, I went to Big Rapids, 53 miles N. E. and 38 miles west of Grand Rapids. Its population is 3,000. The route with few exceptions, is through an unbroken pine forest, through which the forest fires have swept from year to year, leaving hundreds of acres of blackened trees, divested of every branch and charred to the very Friend Reed-Thirty-four miles top. > From Big Rapids I passed through Grand Rapids to Holland City, on Black Lake, 5 miles from Lake Michigan, a town of 4,000-almost utterly destroyed by the fire of '71. It has not by any means recovered from it. Only one store in the business part, and one church, standing on > the village green, were left, and thither the people fled for refuge. Hope College, a German institution, To the westward 20 miles, and 11 miles from the mouth of Grand Rivregular line of steamers to Chicago and Milwaukee. This is a great summer resort for people from Chicago and other cities. There is a fine drive to the shore. The Cutler House is second to none in Michigan; opposite it are Mineral Springs, used

There is doubtless such a thing as when, being repeated, he heard there staggered in out of the rain a dripping figure—that of Jessie Lester, square—in the center of which are termination are admirable qualities in themselves, but it sometimes happens that a decision made upon the the bride who was to be on the mor- the various buildings of the different spur of the moment is regretted uprow.
